

To our students,

We hope that you and your loved ones are safe and well. The Covid-19 situation is evolving quickly and this may affect your higher education plans. We want to keep you updated on how theRightU is continuing our efforts to support you as we respond to the guidelines set out by the governments in the United Kingdom, Australia, United States, Canada and Switzerland.

Students and Team Members of TheRightU

The health and wellbeing of our students is our first priority. At theRightU, we have implemented telecommuting to minimise any possible spread of virus to you and the community. We continue to provide advice and guidance to students through online communication, which means that there is no change in the way we support you. We are known to be highly efficient and effective in keeping in touch with our students online, with or without virus! Whether you need mentoring on your education and career options, or simply want to have a chat about life overseas, we remain accessible to you.

Institutions are going Virtual

Governments worldwide have introduced a variety of measures to contain and mitigate the spread of Covid-19. Other than travel restrictions, all our partner institutions have commenced online delivery of teaching. This means that students are now able to attend classes even when they are back in Singapore. Institutions have also expressed their commitment to ensure the wellbeing of international student who choose to remain in campus.

Students starting school in 2020

We understand your concern about not being able to commence school this year. Institutions are monitoring the situation very closely, and most have expressed their readiness to deliver classes online if the situation does not improve. There are also plans for some institutions to postpone their start dates by 1-3 months. Please reach out to us for the latest decisions by the institutions, and allow us to guide you on the best approach to the situation.

Students entering school in 2021

Governments around the world are stepping up efforts to contain and mitigate the virus spread, and there is concerted effort to launch a vaccine by early next year. We are hopeful that the situation will stabilise in the coming months, and that international travel and face-to-face teaching will resume by next year.

You may be nervous about whether the situation will improve in time for your school. Or you may be wondering if you should take up an offer now or defer the offer to a later intake. Please reach out to us for a discussion, and we will be glad to provide our advice based on your specific circumstance.

Finally, we want reassure you that we remain available to answer your queries and concerns. You may reach us here:
